Background: In 1992, the Department of Social and Health Services proposed a pilot program to localize the administration of non-AFDC child day-care programs. The 1993 budget included a directive to the department to move to local administration of child care programs by July 1, 1994.

In 1994, the department recommended a pilot approach to localization be utilized to coincide with the creation of community networks. The 1994 legislation required the department to report on its efforts to locally administer child care subsidy programs.

The department submitted a report to the Legislature in December 1994 with its proposal to begin a program to localize child care subsidy programs.

Summary of Bill: The Department of Social and Health Services, in consultation with the Family Policy Council, creates a design committee to advise the department and recommend the process for the transition to locally administered child care subsidy programs. The membership of the committee is represented by various affected groups, including low-income parents, local government, community networks, and the child care coordinating committee. By July 1, 1996, as many as six local communities are chosen to locally administer child care subsidy programs.
