Background:

The Children's Administration of the Department of Social and Health Services (DSHS) served over 19,000 children in out-of-home care during fiscal year 2000. Over 6,300 licensed foster homes were available to serve the majority of these children.

A 1999 Foster Care Task Force identified a number of priorities for improving the foster care system. Foster care rates, assessments for children entering foster care, and foster parent recruitment and retention were identified as priorities for immediate action. Restructured rates are being implemented and assessment improvement efforts are underway. Recruitment and retention efforts are ongoing.

Some child welfare practitioners and advocates support accreditation as a means to promote some of the foster care system improvements identified as priorities by the task force, and other system improvements. Accreditation involves self-evaluation and evaluation by an outside entity against performance standards developed nationally.

Summary:

The Legislature finds that accreditation of children's services improves the quality of services to the children and families. The DSHS is required to undertake accreditation of children's services with the goal of completing the process by July 2006. The department and accrediting entity are required to report annually on progress toward achieving accreditation.

Testimony For: (Children & Family Services) Kids in foster care deserve a fair deal. Children damaged by their own families need intervention and professional help. We have a moral obligation as well as a legal obligation to see that foster children are properly cared for. We need to invest in children's lives; we can pay now, or pay later when these children become adults and end up in the prison system, the mental health system or the welfare system. The department supports the bill and has some suggested language changes that will address concerns.

Testimony For: (Appropriations) (Substitute bill) It is in the state's best interest to do a good job with vulnerable children who are coming out of homes abused and neglected. There is a great deal more to do, and we need a more systemic approach to change the culture of the agency and its relationship to foster parents and foster children is needed. Accreditation will achieve that by allowing the department to change the way it does business to meet national standards. The cost of accreditation won't be known until it begins in the local offices.

Making foster parenting a more professional effort will serve foster children better. Lessening a caseworker's load helps a child tremendously. This bill will be saving money in the long run and will be helping less fortunate children. This legislation will make a difference in the lives of foster children and foster parents by saving lives, saving money because it's an investment in the future, and saving our communities by giving foster children every chance we can, so that they can be productive members of society. Accreditation has worked for non-profits.

The DSHS is committed to the concept of statewide accreditation. Moving to accreditation helps deliver more effective services and improve the quality of care. Respite care is important. The department will try to absorb as much of the administrative costs for accreditation as it can.
