Background: The Legislature authorized the creation of a forest products commission during the 2001 legislative session. The forest products commission would operate similarly to the other commodity commissions in the state. It is responsible for the promotion of forest products, conducting research related to managed forests, and promoting managed forests. The commission would be funded by assessments paid by its members.

During the 2001 interim, the United States Supreme Court issued its decision of U.S. Department of Agriculture v. United Foods. The court found that a federal law requiring mushroom growers to pay for the establishment of a mushroom council to promote mushrooms was a violation of the First Amendment right to free speech under the United States Constitution. The court did not address in its decision, however, whether promotion by such a commission constituted government speech that is entitled to First Amendment protection.

The statutory provisions regarding when the director of the Department of Agriculture must call an election regarding the establishment of a forest products commission has caused some confusion.

Summary of Bill: Legislative intent is clarified to indicate that any advertising, marketing, or public education by the forest products commission constitutes government speech and is therefore entitled to protection under the First Amendment. Additional language is added to the legislative intent section to reflect the importance of research related to forest products and managed forests to the citizens of the state.

Language is added to clarify when the director of the Department of Agriculture must call an election regarding the establishment of a forest products commission.

The association of producers of forest products interested in forming a forest products commission must reimburse the Department of Agriculture for its costs for convening the producers to nominate commission members and for conducting the election. If the commission is approved, it must reimburse the association for the costs paid to the department.

Appropriation: None.

Fiscal Note: Not requested.

Effective Date: Ninety days after adjournment of session in which bill is passed.

Testimony For: The forest products commission legislation needs to be clarified to make it work given federal court cases and issues concerning its establishment.

Testimony Against: None.

Testified: Bill Garvin, Washington Forest Protection Association.
